

#PeopleMakePetrofac

Kanchana

I love to set deadlines and, meeting them would give a great sense of accomplishment. Being a mechanical engineer, it is definitely needed to have technical knowledge, but communications skills are equally important to get the job done.

What makes me feel proud to work at Petrofac is the wonderful initiatives the company's coming with and making everyone feel included. My colleagues would describe me as I'm reliable when it comes to both professional and personally, but quite clumsy. <laugh>.

I'm really excited to work on 2GW because it's going to be the biggest platform and really going to be challenging. I chose a career in engineering because it's a really a creative environment and you get to find solution on a daily basis.

Being a member of Pride Group helped me understand the problems which they're going to, which we are not really aware of.

I do think that people make Petrofac because the energy people bring will make it a better organisation.