Dola

What makes me proud of working at Petrofac is being part of a supportive team, something people don't know about. My job is that it involves people management as much as technical expertise, which is why it's important to build a network around you.

I think my colleagues would describe me as someone hardworking and determined, but also fun to be around. I'm proud to have worked on the Duqm project in Oman, where I was amazed by the size of the site and the collaboration among the teams there.

Petrofac has supported me by encouraging me to explore in my career and developed skills in more than one role.

The most valuable lesson I've learned in my career is that it's extremely important to build a supportive network around you, of colleagues and peers to help you.

To anyone considering a career in Petrofac, go for it. It's a great place to work, interact with people, and achieve more on the daily.
